Reagan's 'New Federalism': Friends and Foes See a Bid to Shift Attention From Deficits

By Hedrick Smith New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - With a far-reaching initiative for shifting federal programs to the states. President Reagan has signaled his deter-mination to press forward with "the Reagan revolution" in government and has moved forcefully in an effort to dominate the legislative agenda in the face of recession and a restless election-year Congress.

fn a State of the Unioo Message that culminated weeks of internal debate, Mr. Reagan overruled the White House staff and economic advisers who urged him to combat ballooning federal deficits by increasing excise taxes. And he took the risk that later this year Congress would see deficits as its top priority and try to take the political initiative from him.

Tacitly, by changing his emphasis from the hudget and tax-cutting hattles of 1981 to what he calls his "new federalism," the president was adapting in the economic reality that he could oot produce "a quick fix" for the economy and the political reality that congressional majnrities would prohably halk at another round of huge hudget cuts. Allies and foes alike saw his initiative as an effort to divert attention from the projected budget delicits of nearly $100 billion in this fiscal year.

Instead, Mr. Reagan chose to emphasize that his primary personal mission was to slow the growth of federal spending and reduce the size of the U.S. government, and in make clear that even the current economic downturn has not shaken his faith in the tax-cut strategy of supply-side economics.

He seemed to be answering his own inner circle when he declared: "The doubters would have us turn back the clock with tax increases that would offset the personal tax-rate reduc-tions already passed by this Cnngress. Raise present taxes to cut future deficits, they tell us. Well, I don't believe we should buy their argu-

He seemed also to be warning congressional Republicans and Democrats who were tempted to enact tax increases, cautioning that this tactic would not lower deficits or balance the budget but would only slow economic growth, reduce production and destroy future jnhs. And in acknowledgment that public paprogram as well as the conservative political revolution he has introduced, Mr. Reagan urged the public to "summon the strength to cootinue on the course we have charted" in spite of the pain of rising unemployment and widening recession. In terms of political strategy, White House officials reckoned, moreover, that after a year when Mr. Reagan dominated the political are-na, the new proposal to gradually turn over 40 federal programs to the states oot only fit the president's basic philosophy hut was also likely to be the best way to sustain political mo-

"This represents the fifth installment on the president's mandate," James A. Baker 3d, the White House chief of staff, said. "Last year, he cut spending he cut taxes, he cut regulations and he strengthened defense. The fifth thing he wanted to do was return power to the states. This fundamental realignment of the federal system is a dramatic and bold initiative, and I think it's going to allow us to domioate the debate."

But an immediate omen came from the House Republican leader, Robert M. Michel, of Illinois. While backing the president's pro-posal, he noted that it did oot directly address the nation's economic plight in an election

"This is right in line with Republican dogma." Rep. Michel said, "but my enthusiasm has to be muted a hit because it doesn't create ooe new job now. It's a partial answer to the lnng-range problem hut it does not do any-thing for the immediate problem."

Not only Republican congressional leaders hut even White House officials concede that, as Congress approaches early votes on raising the debt ceiling or adopting a 1983 budget res-olutinn, the deficit issue could take precedence and touch off hipartisan efforts to cut military spending or raise taxes.

Pressure Forecast

Both moderate Northern Republicans such as Rep. Bill Green of New York and conserva-tive Southern Democrats like Rep. G.V. Montgomery of Mississippi forecast pressure on the president 10 cut military spending to restrain

"I see some signs that Republicans in both

if the problem of the deficits and interest rates is not addressed head-on." said Rep. James R. Jones of Oklahoma, the House Budget Committee chairman.

Presidential aides conceded that Mr. Reagan might have more problems dominating the political arena this year than last but decided that they had little alternative but to come up with a series of initiatives, including abolition of the departments of energy and education but with the "new federalism" as the centerpiece, to gain the upper hand politically.

"I think we can hold the initiative this year." White House official, said. "We're not naive. It's going to be tough. But we think we can get a good portion of this program passed. And if we had gone up there with just more budget cuts, we would lose the momentum in five for Mr. Reagan himself to take his case to the nation, scheduling appearances before legisla-tures in Illinois, Iowa and Minnesota early

But the "new federalism" package faces a long, arduous legislative fight, especially with Democrats in a partisan mood, as they indicated in their prepackaged, naonnally televised it touches many programs, it will have to be approved by a host of congressional committees and is likely to take up most of the year's

One issue that promises to dog Mr. Reagan increasingly, and one he sought to anticipate at several poiots Tuesday night, is the Democratic charge that his entire program unfairly hurts the poor. Even some Northern Republicans say that will be a critical test of his "new federlism" proposals.

Worried about the impact on New York. Rep. Green said that Congress would have to ensure that the tax revenues the president was turning over to the states would grow as rapidly as the programs that are being turned over and also that Northern states would not be hurt by having other states adopt lower standards for programs like food stamps and wel-

Recalling the comment by David A. Stockman, the hudget director, that the 1981 Reagan tax program was "a Trojan Horse" for traditional Republican economics, Rep. Green said: "If Stockman put together this gift horse for the states, we will want to look at it in the teeth very closely."

Memories of Assault On Mine in Katowice Darken Poland's Mood

By John Darnton

New York Times Service WARSAW - Polish travelers from Katowice say the situation in the Silesian coal-mining region is much more tense than elsewhere in the country, with heavy police and army patrols and deep poblic an-ger over the killing of striking miners several days after martial law was declared.

Numerous reports, including one from a local priest, insist that perhaps as many as six members of the security forces also died in the assault on the Wujek mine, in which at least seven miners were killed on Dec. 16. The authorities have denied that any policemen or soldiers have been killed anywhere in the country. "I talked with a father [priest] who was present throughout the attack," said a 22-year-old man from Katowice, "and he saw six cluding one high party source, have conceded privately that at least one policeman died Wujek mine, which is in a Katowice suburh. However, there is no way to obtaio independent confirmation of any of the reports.

The young man from Katowice said he visited the Wujek mine last week and found that a wire fence placed over a hole knocked into the concrete wall by a tank had become a makeshift shrine. Near the fence was an 8-foot-high crucifix and, oext to that, seven red and wellow miners' helmets.

"Every miner on his way to work stops, lifts his cap or kneels and lights a candle." he said. Nearby, on the fence itself, were plastered scores of leaflets and posters, denouncing the police and extolling the Solidarity union.

"Solidarity was and will be," read one, Others said: "Death to the fascist murderers of our min-

Various leaflets were attached to the fence, including the notice of a funeral service in the memory of the tragically murdered miners." The travelers said that the authorities had refused permission for a mass funeral for the alain miners. Instead, the family of each victim

President Proposes Transfer Of Responsibility to States

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — President Reagan has proposed an extensive realignment of government re-sponsibilities between Washington and the states and said he would not raise taxes this year because his economic program will hring federal deficits down and restore prosperity.

Presenting his first State of the Unioo message on Tuesday, Mr. Reagan called for "a single, bold stroke" to make government more Re-iterating a pledge made Jan. 19, he said, "If the events in Poland continue to deteriorate, further measures will follow." He added that the United States will act firmly toward "those who export terrorism and subversion in the Caribbean and elsewhere, especially Cuba and Libya."

The proposal to turn more responsibilities over to the states, which Mr. Reagan called "New Federalism," would realize a dream that be has had since the start of his political life in the 1960s. He campaigned year after year against big government, and his proposal would make federal government a good deal smaller. "Our citizens feel they have lost

For an interim period, the federal government would also turn over funds to help the states pay for them, but after 1991 that aid would cease and it would be up to the states to levy the taxes to support them.

The president devoted most of his address to federalism and the ecocomy, but he also said:

An African diplomat said that the black-ruled nations had accepted the main aspects of the Western proposals for constitutional guidelines for the territory, also known as Namibia but objected to the proposed voting arrangements for an assembly that would write the constitution.

In Cape Town, South African officials described their government's response as "positive" and said they regarded the first phase of the plan as completed. No de-tails were given, however, and there was no indication from diplomatic sources as to whether any qualifications or conditions had been attached.

It appeared that, in view of the objection raised by the black-ruled nations, further delay was in prospect for the attempt made for nearly five years by the United States, Britain, France, West Germany and Canada to bring about the independence of the disputed

It would also involve devising some means of overcoming South Africa's contention that the United Nations, which would supervise the elections, is hiased in favor of the guerrillas of the South-West Africa Peoples Organizatioo, which has been fighting for the territory's independence. The five Western nations' firstphase proposal would lay down the broad principles, including a hill of rights, to govern the constitution for an independent Namibia. There appears to be little controversy over this. Voting System Criticized

The document also provides that half the delegates to a constitutional assembly should be chosen by proportional representation and half from single-member consti-tuencies. It is this feature that has drawn criticism from the blackruled African countries and the guerrilla group. Under the proposal, each voter would vote separately for a party and for a candidate in a gengraphle constituency.

Black African officials urge that either one system or the other be adopted, and they say they prefer proportional representation.

Reagan Budget Lifts Projections for Deficits. other Republican president, Ger- financial and business executives

jority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., a Tennessee Republican,

Despite the president's sweeping expression of distaste for increasing taxes, a theme that goes back to the 1980 campaign, the White House "fact sheet" did make two limited proposals for raising addi-

One was to renew Mr. Reagan's request of Sept. 24 to close "loop-holes" in some parts of the tax code that affect corporations. The second proposal was to strengthen the present minimum corporate tax to make sure, the White House said, "that all larger, economically profitable corporations pay a mini-mum share of federal taxes."

Secretary Regan said the broader corporate minimum tax would raise less than $3 billion in the 1983 fiscal year, $4.5 billion or so in the fiscal year 1984 and $5 billion a year thereafter.

Neither Mr. Regan nor Murray L. Weidenbaum, the chairman of the Council of Economie Advisers, would disclose exactly what defi-cits for 1983 and 1984 would be projected in the president's budget on Feb. 8. But Mr. Regan's comment of declines of roughly $10 billion a year pointed to a 1983 deficit of $80 billion to $90 billion plus range, an interpretation be did not dispute.

The White House estimated that the "loophole" closing would pro-duce revenues of $24 billion in 1983-84, a trifle more than the revcaue forecast of Sept. 24.

Mr. Regan gave a private briefing Tuesday afternoon to several

Haig Offers Proposals On Palestinian Talks

Washington Post Service
JERUSALEM — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. initiated a new U.S. push for early and visible progress in the Middle East peace process in a round of meet-ings with Israeli leaders here

According to U.S. and Israeli ofcan "ideas" for bridging the gaps in several areas between Israel and Egypt in the stalled negotiations about Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank and Gaza.

The diplomats described Mr. Haig's offerings as suggestions of a general nature rather than formal or detailed proposals. After a fourbour meeting Wednesday night with Prime Minister Menachem Begin, Mr. Haig termed them "general formulas in certain narrow areas."

Israeli Army radio said the suggestions dealt with land and settlement policy as well as the legislative powers of the proposed self-governing authority for the Palestinians. Official briefers of the two sides would confirm only that the scope and authority of the autonomous council was involved.

There was no expectation that Israel would immediately agree to Mr. Haig's suggestions or that Egyptian officials would do so when the secretary of state travels on to Cairo Thursday.
The bope expressed by U.S. officials was rather that Mr. Haig's ideas would bring about a common concentration on areas where major progress can be made, dispelling concern that the Camp David peace process is dead except for the return of the Sinai scheduled for midnight April 25.

"Haig told us today be very strongly believes it is possible to reach an agreement," an Israeli of-ficial said. He added that Mr. Haig did not make clear how extensive such an agreement might be or when it might be reached.

"There's a great deal more to be done, and there are many differences," Mr. Haig said after his long meeting with Mr. Begin. "But there is also some slight progress." Mr. Haig's earlier visit was de-scribed as a "fact-finding" mission to determine whether intensified U.S. diplomatic involvement is warranted and necessary. The discussions Wednesday seemed to indicate an affirmative answer and a decision to become more active at a high level in pushing for a renewal of progress. The secretary of state gave no clear indication in his initial talks Wednesday about his preferred mechanism for moving ahead with the suggestions he advanced. There was no talk of a three-way meeting on the foreign-minister level of Mr. cisions, particularly if Mr. Bre-zhnev's health prevents him from taking full charge of Politburo af-Haig, Yitzhak Shamir of Israel and Kamal Hassan Ali of Egypt, according to Israeli officials.

"France is on a road from which no one will make it deviate: that of the construction of an independent policy guaranteeing its security and a condition of its action for peace and freedom, government spokesman Pierre Beregovoy quoted Mr. Mitterrand as saying dur-ing a regular weekly Cabinet meet-

Mr. Beregovoy said that Prime Minister Pierre Meuroy will ex-plain France's position on the gas contract in a statement Thursday to the National Assembly.

Conservative forces and members of Mr. Mitterrand's Socialist Party have criticized the government for the 25-year contract with the Soviet Union that was signed Saturday in Paris.

The critics contend that the agreement with the Soviet Union is contrary to the government's con-demnation of the Dec. 13 military crackdown in Poland and to the support that the French people have demonstrated for the Polish independent labor union, Solidar-

The agreement was the first maior contract between a Western country and the Soviet Union since martial law was imposed in Poland and since President Reagan imposed trade sanctions against the Soviet Union. Mr. Mitterrand's administration has contended that it is opposed to such sanctions because the Soviet Union has not directly intervened

Under the new contract, France will buy 8 billion cubic meters (282 billion cubic feet) of natural gas-from Siberia each year beginning in 1984, if the pipeline from Siber-ia to Western Europe is completed by that time.

France was the third European country to sign a natural gas con-tract with the Soviet Union. West Germany and Italy concluded similar agreements last fall, before the imposition of martial law in Po-

During the Cabinet meeting Wednesday, Mr. Beregovoy said that Mr. Mitterrand referred to France's absolute right to an independent foreign policy.

"The independence of the security of France rest on its ability to control its economy as much as on its own defense effort, on the re-spect of its alliances and on the organization of collective security in Europe," Mr. Beregovoy quoted the president as saying. The United States had urged the French government not to sign the contract because it would increase France's dependence on the Soviet bloc for its energy needs.

Under the contract, the Soviet Union will supply 30 percent of France's natural gas, twice as much as it currently supplies.
French officials, however, contend that imports of Soviet crude oil are expected to decline, so that overall French dependency on the Soviet Union for energy is not likely to change. France now imports 5 percent of its total energy needs from the Soviet Union.

Mr. Mitterrand received some unexpected support Wednesday from former conservative Prime Minister Raymond Barre, who noted that the contract negotiations began when he was moffice.

"I respect the continuity of the state," Mr. Barre said, "I thus continuity of the state," Mr. Barre said, "I thus continue the state," Mr. Barre said, "I firm my agreement with the deci-sions the government has taken." Mr. Barre also said that only Algeria and Nigeria were capable of supplying similar quantities of natural gas to France.

"But above all. I reject the political-economic amalgams that some people make," the former prime minister said. "In the Polish crisis, heroeries is dominant."

Westmoreland Denies Suppressing Reports

By Charles Mohr New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Gen. William C. Westmoreland and a number of his associates during the Vietnam war have indignantly denied the suggestion in a television documentary that there had been a "conspiracy" to alter and suppress intelligence on the size and strength of enemy forces.

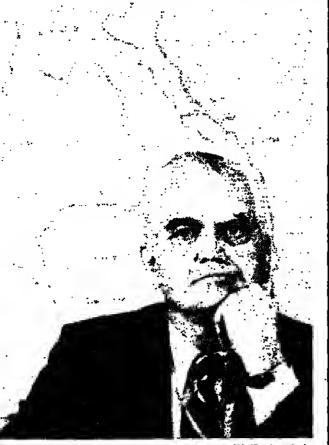

But during a lengthy news conference Tuesday morning the retired officers confirmed at least some of the factual assertions made during the CBS broadcast by other retired mili-tary and civilian officials about a dispute in 1967 on the subject of letnamese Communist force es-

In a show of solidarity, Gen. Westmoreland was joined Tuesday morning by Ellsworth Bunker, a former ambassador to Vietnam; retired Air Force Lt. Gen. Daniel O. Reagan Seeking Air Transports, Toxic Arms

By Richard Halloran

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - President Reagan has approved a plan to double the military budget for long-range air transports and to go ahead with a costly program to produce new ebemical weapons, according to administration nili-

A senior Air Force general said that the administration would request $11 billion over the next five years to buy 50 Lockheed C-5 Galaxies, the world's largest cargo plane, and 44 McDonnell Douglas KC-10s, which can serve either as cargo planes or tankers. At the same time, other administration officials said that the president would notify Congress within a few weeks of his plans to order production of chemical shells and bombs in a program estimated to cost $6 billion over the next five

Budgetary Implications

Congress, which must vote on both plans, seems likely to approve the air transports, although the high price will undoubtedly raise nhjections. The chemical weapons proposal, however, has already drawn stiff opposition and seems certain in arouse more from oppo-nents who contend that it would inflame anti-American sentiment in Western Europe, where the weapons will be used if a war

The hudgetary implications of the two decisions were not imme-diately clear. It could not be determined whether the programs had already been included in the milithey would be financed by taking money from other military pro-grams or whether they would add to the projected budgets.

Although the two decisions moved on separate tracks, they were loosely connected. The air transports are intended to move tanks, helicopters, armored troop carriers and artillery, including chemical shells, to Europe to rein-force U.S. troops there, or to the region around the Gulf to support the Rapid Deployment Force, The chemical weapons, intended for use in massed land combat, would be stored in the United States hut would need air transport to be rushed to Europe in the event of bostilines. Lt. Gen. Kelly H. Burke, who is in charge of weapons development and acquisition for the Air Force, said at a briefing that the administration, Congress and the military services agreed the nation was painfully lacking in long-range airlift capacity.

To overcome that, he said, the Air Force has made several recom-mendations, including the development of a new transport craft known as the McDonnell Douglas C-17. It would have had better military capabilities than the C-5 but would have taken about 18 months longer to build.

Gen. Burke said that the C-17 program was based on a budget of $5.5 billion. But Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and Deputy Secretary Frank C. Carlucci tuld the Air Force to lift the budget ceiling and find a way in produce more airlift capacity sooner.

After re-examining the issue, the general said, the Air Force con- der. cluded that it could double this capacity by 1989 with the new fleet of C-5s and KC-10s. This would be about three years sooner than with the C-17s because no research and development was needed, the production facilities already existed, crews were trained and logistic sysiems were in place. The Air Firce has 77 C-5s and six KC-10s on band, with 10 more KC-10s on or-

Study of Japanese Men Finds the Socially Isolated Run Greater Risks

The Associated Press

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Social isolation may be hazardous to the heart, according to scientists who say that single men without close friends run two nr three times the risk of developing heart disease as their more sociable counterparts.

Social isolation may be as important a risk in the development of heart disease as ciga-rette smoking, high blood pressure and high cholesterol, according to Leonard Syme, a professor of epidemiology at the University of California at Berkeley.

Speaking Tuesday at a science writers' symposium sponsored by the American Heart Association, Mr. Syme said several other researchers also have found links between social behavior and heart disease.

He said his research began with an attempt to explain why Japanese who have moved in the United States seem to have much higher rates of heart disease than dn Japanese in Japan, even when they continue to eat the diet of their native country.

A study of 17,000 Japanese in Japan, Ha-waii and San Francisco showed that those in in San Francisco showed a still higher rate of heart disease.

That discovery could not be explained on the basis of changes in diet or differences in such factors as cigarette smoking, high blood pressure and levels of cholesterol in the blood, Mr. Syme said.

Those in California whn adapted Western ways had five times the heart disease of those who lived traditionally," Mr. Syme said. Because the traditional Japanese lifestyle is based on strong families and stable social relationships, Mr. Syme and his colleagues tried to discover whether those relationships somehow kept the incidence of heart disease down.

The researchers studied a randomly chosen group of 6,928 residents of Alameda County, just east of San Francisco, and found that people with un friends had two tn three times the death rate of people with the most friends and social contact.

Further study with the Japanese group showed that isolation — as indicated by marital status, church attendance and group memberships — was closely associated with know, the better off you are," Mr. Syme said. The researchers found, however, that the important factor was not how many people an individual knows but rather that the person has some close relationships. Those with no close relationships at all seem to be the ones whn are most in danger of developing heart disease —and other diseases, Mr. Syme said.

The researchers also found that it was not important whether a person felt lonely or isolated, or whether a socially active person was pleased with his relationships - it was only important that be or she had them.

"It seems to be important that you're married — it doesn't seem to matter how happy you are about it," Mr. Syme said.

Mr. Syme said the discoveries linking iso lation and heart disease seem to apply only to men — social contact does not seem to be as important for women in lowering their chances of having heart attacks.

Mr. Syme and his colleagues are puzzled by their findings. Although he speculated that the lack of interaction somehow weakens the body's resistance to disease. Mr. Syme said he had nn good explanation for MADRID — A bomb exploded at the construction site of a nuclear power plant at Lemoniz, near the northern city of Bilbao, in March of 1978, the first major at-tack carried out by the Marxist-Leninist Basque separatist organization ETA (Basque Homeland and Liberty). The explosion, which killed two workmen, was destined to make the power station one of the costliest in the world.

Four years later, the power company building the Lemoniz complex, Iberduero, has had so many other installations blown up by ETA that its management warned this month that power cuts are practically inevitable in the near future in the Basque Country, the area for which the company is the main supplier.

With $1.53 billion already invested in the project, the owners face new administrative delays now that the Lemoniz plant is nearing completion at last.

The Basque regional govern-ment, which is walking a tightrope between the kind of pro-independence sentiments that keep the secessionist ETA alive and the conservative policies of the re-gion's ruling Basque Nationalist Party, at first fought and won a battle in the regional parliament in favor of the nuclear plant. Then, in an about-face, it yielded to pressure for a referendum on the mat-months ago, when the question first came up. The premier's opinion was that any plan to subject major energy policy decisions to the referendum process was out of the question.

The government decided at a Cabinet meeting here Jan. 15 to turn down the request for a referendum and negotiations between the regional and national governments on the Lemoniz question were scheduled to resume after being interrupted in December

Apart from the direct investment at Lemoniz, the amount which Iberduero has had to spend in order to build the power station has been enormous.

For most of last year, work was halted at Lemoniz after the killing of the chief construction engineer, José Maria Ryan. Following that murder, it was a long time before the company could convince workers to get back on the job. ETA threatened to kill anyone who took Mr. Ryan's place. That delay reportedly cost the company $357

As 1981 ended, Lemoniz was causing such a drain on the company that its board of directors reacted to the Basque government's referendum proposal with a public warning that further delays would oblige the company to make decisions "in the interest of the shareholders and employees." It was clear by that time that the Lemoniz project would be a liability un-less it could benefit from ample government, which, in that case, would presumably open the plant if only to show defiance against the leftist guerrillas.

However, both the Madrid and the Basque governments are op-posed to nationalization. So, whatever solution is worked out will undoubtedly respect Iberduero's ownership as much as possible.

A little over a year ago the minister of industry and energy, Igna-cio Bayon said to a committee of the Cortes that a one-year delay in putting a 1,000-megawatt power station into operation would mean having to import 1.4 million thore tons of oil. Lemoniz alone, if and when it reaches full production, can provide 75 percent of the energy required in the Basque Country.

The solution that seems to be shaping up for the controversial power plant is the formation of a management consortium under the control of the regional government, with the participation of the national government, to handle the actual running of the installation, with Iberduero distributing the electricity produced.

That would offer at least a semblance of public control, and it would also furnish a better basis for establishing tight security. For the specter of a nuclear accident, deliberately provoked by the ETA, is more frightening than the mere presence of the plant.

Israel Is Said to Warn Of Military Response If Egypt Breaks Pact

By David K. Shipler New York Times Service

JERUSALEM --- Israel's defense minister, Ariel Sharon, has report-edly made it clear to the United States and Egypt that any Egyp-tian violation of the demilitarized status of Sinai after Israel's withdrawal in April would trigger an Israeli military move into the pen-

In his recent talks with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and Egyptian officials in Cairo, Mr. Sharon, a former general who fought in the Sinai, is said to have stopped short of threatening all-out war in such an instance. But he is understood to have explained that Israel would not be satisfied with diplomatic protests if Egyptian troops or tanks moved across the Suez Canal; in that event, Israeli military forces would be sent into the Sinai in the hope that Egypt could be induced to withdraw before warfare erupted.

According to several Israeli officials, Mr. Sharon's purpose in drawing this "red line" was to emphasize Israel's reliance on the demilitarization of Sinai as a concrete concession that Egypt has made for the return of the peninsula, which was first captured by Israel in the 1956 war, then relinquished and recaptured in 1967.

'Deep, Deep Anxiety'

There is a deep, deep anxiety, especially in military circles here, that if the peace treaty goes sour, one of the things that can happen is Egyptian troop movements into Sinai," an official said. "Sinai's demilitarization is one of the most important points of the peace; one of the most concrete things is that Sinai will be empty of troops. Otherwise, all we have is a contract."

Under annex one of the peace treaty, signed in March, 1979, the Sinai is to be divided into three zones, each with limits on Egyptian military and police presence.

In Zone A, a band about 35 miles (53 kilnmeters) wide, east of the canal and the Gulf of Suez, Egypt is restricted to one mecha-nized infantry division, including three mechanized infantry brigades, one armored brigade, seven field artillery battalions and up to 126 artillery pieces, 230 tanks, seven antiaircraft battalions with surface-to-air missiles, 126 anti-aircraft guns and 480 armored per-sonnel vehicles. A ceiling of 22,000 personnel is set in this area.

Zone B, a wide band down the peninsula's center, is restricted to Egyptian border units of four battalions with light weapons and wheeled, not tracked, vehicles. A maximum of 4,000 personnel is permitted.

Zone C, along the Israeli border. is to be open to Egyptian civilian police and the multinational peacekeeping force. Nn Egyptian military is permitted, and the Iwo Israeli-built air bases in it are to be used only by civilian aircraft.

Assassination Problem

The emphasis placed by Mr. Sharon on these limits reflects the rising anxiety in Israel as it approaches the April 25 date for re-linquishing the remaining one-third of the Sinai.

After President Anwar Sadat's assassination and amid protests by militant Jewish settlers who want to hold the Sinai, acute nervous-ness is being expressed, even among government officials, about Egypt's ultimate intentions following the April withdrawal.

In addition, officials are anxious that Washington understand the limits of Israeli tolerance of any Egyptian infractions, since the United States is seen as the guarantor of the treaty.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin, Mr. Sharon and other officials have said repeatedly that Israel will keep its commitment to withdraw. But lesser figures in the government are urging a review of the pledge. Rabbi Haim Druckman, deputy minister of religious affairs and a member of the National Religious Party, is now in the United States, leading a group campaign-ing against the withdrawal.

The opponents' main argument is that Egypt cannot be trusted, and the settlers' resistance is expected to make their evacuation disorderly, perhaps violent. Some believe they must put up a show of fierce resistance to make the pullback appear to the world as a painful, traumatic step for Israel, a way of demonstrating how difficult it would be far a similar withdrawal from the West Bank, for example,

According to Israelis and Americans who have spoken recently with Egyptian officials, there is no evidence that Cairo is preparing to subvert the peace treaty.

On the contrary, President Hosni Mubarak has often ex-pressed his commitment to its provisions, and analysts here tend to believe that if his government stays in power, there will be no immediate change. Egypt is militarily weak compared with Israel and would be no match for an Israeli

Max has been dead and gone for the best part of 20 years, and the music hall game is indeed long over; but now, to the stage of the Fortune Theatre, comes "Here's a Funny Thing," a semi-solo show written by R.W. Shakespeare (No. lady, not that Bill Shakespeare) in which John Barndon, aided only by a somewhat recalcitrant pianist, attempts to bring Max back to the boards. Physically the resemblance is not that great, but then, if Barn-don is not in real life much like Max Miller, neither was Max Mil-

He was born Thomas Henry Sargent in the shims of Brighton in November, 1895, acquiring his new name after his wife saw a Max Factor poster on the back of a bus. And though the gandy splendor of the white trilby and the flowered suit was to become his stagemark, the real Max was much more like the rather down-at-beel old trouper we meet in the first act here, clutching his sandwiches and cursing Val Parnell.

Parnell, it will be recalled, was the Palladium manager who, having allowed Jack Benny to do 15 minutes during a 1950 Royal Vari-ety Show, tried to haul Miller off after a mere five. Treating this as an affront to his patriotism rather than his professionalism, Miller stayed on to do the full 15; backstage afterward, a livid Parnell told him be would never work the Pal-ladium again. "Mr. Parnell," said Miller, "you are ten years and £200,000 too late." He had made his fortune, and was happy to re-tire on it to Brighton — except, of course, that public demand brought him back to the Palladium for a triumphal farewell two years

Contrary to popular belief (including Osborne's), Miller was oot Jewish, and his humor was rooted was ruthless, waspish, invulnerable and very funny. In the course of an eccentric career be once filmed with Gielgud (in "The Good Companions") and topped the bill at every palace of varieties in the land. He was a seaside postcard brought to life, a stick of Brighton rock made flesh, and to see him whole you had to see him live.

Barndon manages, in the second helf, an adequate impression and, in the first half, a sketchy stage biography. I'm inclined to wish he had developed the first half further, for it is there that we begin to see the contrasts between Thomas Henry Sargent and Max Miller at their most interesting.

When "The Sound of Music" opened at the Apollo Victoria last August, I was careful to arrange my summer holiday so as to avoid it. A thin, not to say skeletal, week for new productions, coupled with the inescapable fact that the tills are still alive with the sound of singing nums and Petula Clark, has, however, forced me belatedly toward that bizarre entertainment, and I have to report that it is not nearly as bad as I had feared. Moviemaker Will Complete Natalie Wood's Last Film

HOLLYWOOD — The science-fiction movie "Brainstorm," which Natalie Wood was filming when she died, will be completed, according to production director Jack Grossberg. The filming of the $12.5-million picture was suspended after Wood drowned Nov. 29 off Santa Catalina Island, where she had been cruising with her busband, actor Robert Wagner, and actor Christopher Walken, who also stars in the film. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer had discussed the possibility of shelving the film, much of which was shot in North Carolina. But Grossberg said Tuesday that production will resume Feb. 8 with all further filming in Wood was scheduled for only three more days of shooting, but her remaining scenes were said to be among the most important in the film.

Ira David Wood, a Raleigh, N.C., actor-director who plays Natalie Wood's lover in the movie, said studio executives decided to resume production when director Douglas Trumbull convinced the studio he had enough footage of the actress to complete the film. "Brainstorm" is a story about a research scientist, played by Walken, who invents a device that transmits emotions and thoughts from ooe person to another. MGM expects most of the remaining photography to be completed within 17 days after production resumes, said Paula Wyrick of the film office of the North Carolina Department of Commerce. The premiere is tentatively schednled for next Christmas, she added.

The State of the Union

In his first State of the Union address, President Reagan proposed a fundamental shift in the division of responsibility between federal and state governments. The issue here is the degree of local and regional variation in its basic social and civic standards that the United States considers proper.

Mr. Reagan's plan appears to invite retrogression toward far wider inequities among states, with a massive withdrawal of federal authority and federal standards. He is correct in saying that the present webbing of rules drawn up in Washington, and the manifold conditions attached to the money sent from Washington, are sometimes inefficient and frequently-annoying to state officials. But that is hardly the wbole reality of the relationship, or even the greater part of it.

To form a balanced judgment on this dubious plan, it is useful to recall the United States of a generation ago and the enormous disparities tolerated then between the standards of social protection in the poor states and the ricb ones — or the generous ones. Many of those disparities have been greatly mitigated over the past several decades. In some considerable part it is the result of the great mobility of the American population, and the national development of the economy. But one crucial part of the explanation is the many kinds of federal money sent into the states with many kinds of federal requirements for the services that it supported.

Mr. Reagan does not think that a reversion to the practices of the bad old days would be a danger. With reforms like reapportionment and the Voting Rights Act, he said, community practices will genuinely represent community ideas of decency and good sense. In these matters. Mr. Reagan tends to think in terms of the very creditable example of California, which has been a leader among the states in its concern for its citizens.

But what about Texas, recently become quite rich and yet remaining remarkably mean in its treatment of the poor? Texas currently provides an indigent family of four the princely sum of $140 a month to live on. If there is no longer to be any federal money in, say, food stamps, the federal government is going to have trouble enforcing any limits on a state's inclination to cut back on them.

The case for national standards is both practical and moral. It would be grotesque to invite those states with a tradition of social conscience to take disproportionate burdens of the nation's poverty as helpless people fled to them from the penury of the less generous.

There's a direct connection betwen poverty and bad bealth. Is it not strange to argue, as the Reagan plan does, that health programs are inherently a federal responsibility but poverty is not? It is also quite true that the resources of this country are not spread equally across the 50 states. Some have much greater capacity than others to support social welfare and education. It is not at all clear that this new definition of federalism will ac-. tually lead to any real simplification of government. It can save money only through a general decline of standards. It hardly seems to lead, however, toward anything like a more perfect union.

Mikhail A. Suslov

Mikhail Suslov, the veteran Soviet politician who died (peacefully) on Monday at age 79, had, we suspect, a "dirty little secret." He was known as the Kremlin's chief ideologist, but this was a mask. He believed in power, the power of : self-appointed Communist Party elite. And wby not? The party took him off the farm, educated him in its fashion. gave him work - he was hip-deep in the purges of the 1930s — gave him high office (the Central Committee from 1941, the Politburo from 1952) and then dignified as ideology the crude strictures he laid down to a succession of challengers of Kremlin orthodoxy: the Yugoslavs, the Chinese, Soviet dissidents, most recently the Poles.

Tall for a Russian, gaunt in visage, a familiar gray eminence hovering at the clbow of his better known peers for more than three decades, Mr. Suslov certainly looked the part of chief ideologist. But he was really something else: a diligent hatchet man, always ready to belabor the victim of the moment. He had to be something else for, by nearly universal account, ideology is a hollow force in his country, an object of neglect and contempt. No one could have sustained a highflying career like his if be were beld responsible for popular belief.

What, then, did Mikhail Suslov believe? What beliefs do stir or at least bind the tiny handful of people who rule the Soviet Union in the name of Communist ideology?

The permutations of faith in power are, of course, considerable. But perhaps the shrewd and durable Mikhail Suslov had an extra

In the multi-ethnic Soviet Union, he was one of the few Politburo members entirely of the politically dominant Great Russian strain. It began to be noticed a while back that he was invariably the first person on the reviewing stand to rise for the national anthem. For some years observers have seen the Kremlin shading in theme and symbol from a reliance on revolutionary ideology to a reliance on a traditional, muscular, illiberal, ethnocentric Russian nationalism. So much for the Kremlin's chief ideologist.

Wasting Time

All day long, in game arcades and in front of the living room TV, millions of children fire off laser cannon till their trigger thumbs grow numb. Some play Defenders, Space Fury, Pac-Man and similar electronic games for bours on end. Time magazine estimates that in 1981, arcade players alone used up 75,000 man-years and 20 billion quarters. But their intensity is nothing compared with the mounting opposition. Moralists are on the march.

Say what you will about improving eyehand coordination or learning about computers, no obvious benefit results from all those. hours in front of the tube. The games are, in fact, addictive, as some fathers we know have discovered firsthand. But neither is there any obvious harm - which makes the opposition all the more worth pondering.

A New York woman, who is campaigning relentlessly for legal barriers, insists, "These games are corrupting our youth." Towns in New York, New Hampshire, California and Florida have passed ordinances to restrict teen-age use of the machines. The controversy over the lone law, passed by Mesquite, Tex., has worked its way clear up to the United States Supreme Court.

What is the electronic evil these crusaders fear? Gambling? There is none in the video games. Unwholesome surroundings? Implausible. Kids do not routinely go to pool halls to play, and as even critics complain, the games are now found in every pizza parlor and theater lobby. A waste of money? More plausible, particularly when the machines swallow up the kids' lunch money.

But these objections may all be rationalizations. What bugs many parents even more than a waste of money is to see their children

That is not, however, a sin original to video games. Some of us can still tell you what S-H-A-Z-A-M stood for in Captain Marvel stories. (If you must know, Solomon, Hercules, Atlas, Zeus, Archilles and Mercury.) Our parents lectured us about wasting time reading comic books. Others can remember flipping baseball cards or dressing storybook dolls. They, too, have heard the refrain: "Why not read a good book instead of wasting all that time?"

The children of an earlier generation probably beard the same thing when found reading "Captain Billy's Whiz-Bang." The children of a later generation hear it when they sit transfixed by television soap operas.

However virtuous their intent, the critics seem slow to recognize that crusading against time wasters like video games is futile. There is one skill that children of every generation master, a skill that only adults describe as wasting time. With or without video games, wasting time is a part, a good part, of what childhood is all about.

Rebirth of Euro-Communism

Polemical counterbombardment between Communists in Moscow and Communists in Rome has been so intense that any lingering doubts as to whether the split over Poland was for real must be settled forever. All this is interesting enough for students of Mos-

Do 'Plumbers' Deserve a Chance . . .

By Stansfield Turner

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has established new controls to curtail leaks of classified government information. The White House ordered officials throughout the government to get clearance before talking with re-porters about national-security matters. And Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger is instituting lie-detector tests to ferret out

The various news media are not providing the public a balanced response to these commendable ef-forts. They are telling us that inhi-bitions on public servants will result in a less-well-informed press and hence a less-well-informed public, that no such system of con-trols has ever worked anyway, and that the government will continue to leak when it wants to for its own advantages.

What is missing is a discussion of the damage done through unau-thorized leaks.

First, there is the endangering of our sources of intelligence infor-mation. We may spend billions of dollars developing a new technical system for collecting data, then give away the secret for countering it. We may endanger the life of a foreign agent who is taking risks at our request and on our behalf. Per-haps, even more important, by lessening confidence in our ability to protect our agents we reduce the probability that we will be able to recruit the agents today whom we will need in the future.

Handicap

Second, we do direct damage to our foreign policy, and our mili-tary readiness, by tipping our hand or describing our capabilities. Per-haps the most significant element here is that we are often denied oprtunities to take foreign-policy initiatives just because the risk of a leak is so high.

In my opinion, one of the key reasons that the hostage-rescue raid into Iran did not succeed was the perceived necessity for extreme measures to prevent leaks during the planing process. Even at that, the fact that an action of some sort was under way with respect to the hostages was beginning to be perceived by reporters by the time the raid took place.

Leaks of security information are the single most serious handicap to our foreign policy within our government. Certainly, leaks are the greatest problem that our intelligence agencies face.

Most presidents have had to face this issue. Some have made valiant attempts to cootrol leaks, and some of those attempts have been unlawful. President Reagan's approach is certainly neither doomed to failure our unlawful. He deserves a trial period to demonstrate that his new controls will not be abused by overclassification or by selective leaks.

One reason it is worth giving the president's plan a try is that the dangers of controls are being grossly exaggerated. What do leaks accomplish for our country? They often simply advance the time at which the public will be informed and, in so doing, preempt or de-stroy a foreign-policy initiative. Or they release some detail of classi-fied data that is well beyond the interest or comprehension of the particular threats against those ther a Woodward-and-Bernstein whom the Iranians identified as team or a Deep Throat from doing having been with the CIA. Two major newspapers in this country published detailed descriptions of how to distinguish a CIA personfrom other emhassy employees, based on records that the Iranian captors held.

I wrote to the editors and complained that the American public hardly needed the specifics in this instance, and that lives might be at stake. Both editors responded that it was their duty to publish such information despite its irrelevance to informing our public.

The principal argument for not discouraging the illegal practice of leaking is that someooe will uncover another Watergate by this means. That is a risk, but would a For instance, when our hostages set of cootrols such as the presi-were being held in Iran, there were dent has established dissuade ei-

Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein provided a valuable public service through their reporting for The Washington Post, but the popularity of investigative reporting, and of whistle-blowing, has risen too high. There is little question that the public interest today lies on the side of curbing the excesses of unauthorized leaks to which we have subjected ourselves. Let's give the president's plan a fair trial and

... Or Must They Be Stopped?

By William Safire

Washington - Official Washington is currently suffering from one of its periodic outhreaks of leakomania. As always, because the problem has been exaggerated, the solution has become the problem.

More than a score of administratioo officials have been bumiliated hy the Carlucci Chastity Test. This lie-detection examination, which demeans both giver and taker, is designed out so much to discover who leaked national security secrets but to intimidate any government official who dares to reveal or help avoid potential po-litical embarrassments.

The CCT is the brainwashing child of Frank Carlucci, who has long been to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger what Frank Nitti was to Al Capone — a permanent underboss, an enforcer of that combination of lockjaw and lockstep that helps insiders combat their insecurities. It is the first pri-ority of the new NSC chief, "Judge" Clark.

With all due piety, the crack-down on internal dissent is being conducted in the name of national security. People on the inside often confuse national security with memos routinely stamped "secret." They equate the secrets that protect the nation (location of deterrents, and the methods the CIA uses to learn what is happening in Tripoli) with the secrecy that endangers the oatioo by cloaking the development of policy. Much secrecy, like much welfare, is oot directed to the truly needy.

Self-hypoosis then begins, as sycophants begin to extend the president's righteous worry about genuine security leaks with his irritation at seeing the contents of his State of the Union address in print before he delivers it. When Reagan began his bimonthly news conference last week with a crack about leaks, be was kidding - hut he wasu't kidding.

Spirit Returns

When Lyndon Johnson became enraged at leaks, he would change his mind so as to make the leaks inaccurate — and thus was controlled by leakers. When Richard Nixon caught leakomania, he launched the plumbers operation in Room 16 of the Executive Office Ruilding Lucent part that here. ice Building. I went past that basement office the other day. The room number has been removed, but the spirit may be coming back.

An administration that makes extensive use of polygraphs on its own people is a short step from wiretaps. And wiretaps on government sources sooo slop over to wiretaps on media outlets; that is how the solution becomes the problem.

The Carlucci-Clark plumbing operation is not directed at those who want to weaken U.S. defense by leaking genuine secrets; such disservicemen are better thwarted by "bigot lists" and other counterespionage devices with which Carlucci is familiar.

In effect, the New Plumbers are out to scare other Reagan officials — many of them troubled hard-liners - into silence.

How can Reagan be saved from the ravages of leakomania? How can be be shown that his legitimate coocern for protecting the truly ocedy secret must not be perverted into a chilling operation that undermines national policy-making? One way is ridicule; I have already asked an antiques dealer to search for a chastity belt to send to Carlucci. Another way is for the press to accept the enallenge and to urge officials to drive the plumbers batty.

Therefore, send your policy-development leaks to your favorite reporter, through a cutout, if nec-essary, to defeat the polygraph. My own Washington address is 1000 Connecticut Avenue - no zip code needed for leaks. For starters, let's have the memcon on Al Haig's secret meeting with Fidel

The Frustration of Denazification

By Tom Bower

ONDON - Tens of thousands LONDON — Tens of thousands recently released in Washington and London prove conclusively that, despite presidential directives, Germany was oot as denazified after World War II as public opinion believed. Equally disconcerring, the documents show that a disturbingly large oumber of German war criminals remained unprosecuted and unpunished by the Al-lies and settled down to comfortable lives in western Germany.

On Oct. 25, 1942, President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill issued their first major statement on Nazi war crimes and atrocities in occupied Europe. "Retribution for these crimes," promised Churchill, "must henceforth take its place among the major purposes of the war."

On the face of it, this and later, more detailed declarations could leave oo doubt that Allied policy after the war was to hunt down and prosecute those who had masterminded and carried out the cold-blooded murder of more than 12 millioo innocenı people.

The recently released government documents show however, that these pledges were willfully and cynically betrayed by those charged with their implementatioo and that the British were by far the worst offenders.

Futile Deaths

Their casual and more lenient attitude toward the Nazis effectively undermined those U.S. officials who idealistically attempted to fulfill the wartime promises.

To their anger, the Americans discovered that wanted Nazis had found comfortable sanctuary in the neighboring British zone. But, overall, both countries betrayed those who died in the struggle against Nazism in the belief that victory would be followed by jusThe raw statistics alone tell the tale. At the very least, 150,000 Germans are known to have been directly involved in the "final solu-tioo" and other policies resulting in the murders.

Although most of the surviving murderers fled to the West, the Allies managed in convict only 5,000, compared to the 30,000 coovicted in East European countries.

Contrary to the self-delusory and harmful myth that tens of thousands of Nazi war criminals fled to South America, unpalatable evidence is now available to show that the majority of the wanted men were the intended beneficiaries of an officially sanctioned blind eye to murder.

The cause of the postwar failure was a calamitous mixture of lack of interest, lethargy, disbelief about the extent of German crimes and deliberate sabotage by public officials.

Reviewing the situation, Patrick

Dean, later to become British ambassador to Washington, warned his superiors of "the possibility of a real fiasco, with serious political consequences." The consequence was not only the presence of sadistic torturers the streets of Munich and Frankfurt, but also of the more menacing reality that seriously in-criminated Germans had not been removed from influential positions in German society. Teachers and professors who had emphasized the glories of Nazism and the value of Hitler's racial theories were reappointed to teach the postwar generation.

The same civil servants who had willingly served Hitler were nearly all reappointed.

In the industrial Ruhr Valley, it all seems to have been the result of a determined conspiracy by the British, who were determined to resume their prewar relations with German industrialists and bankers and who, in contravention of Allied policy, ignored the Germans' criminal relationship with the

Among the many who profited from the divided Allies was Hermann Abs, now chairman of Germany's largest bank, the Deutsche Bank. Before the war, he was a partner of Delbruck Schickler, the bank that held Hitler's private account, and he represented the Nazi government at the Bank for Inter-oational Settlements. During the war. Abs was intimately involved in his hank's plunder of European industry, the management of factories employing slave labor and the bank's financing of I.G. Farben's synthetic-fuel factory at the Aus-

Frustratingly, they could not arrest him because Bank of England officials had already appointed him to rehuild the German banking system.
With studied charm, Abs recently pronounced a wry epitaph on Allied efforts to purge his country: "Dissension between the Allies was one of the features of postwar policy." An exhausted Richard Bronson on the staff of John J. McCloy, American High Commissioner for Germany, wrote in his valediction: "British indifference and antagonism defeated the American program.

BRUSSELS — Only six weeks after its untimely demise. Solidarity has woo its first posthumous victory in Moscow. The Kremlin's excommunication of the -Italian Communist Party is indisputable proof of the Polish independent union's main thesis: that Marxism reigns and governs only through violence, insult and injury.

The only difference between Warsaw and Rome is that the Kremlin cannot send its tanks to the Eternal City, only the prose of its faithful Pravda.

The Dec. 13 putsch in Warsaw that did away with Solidarity also triggered the coup de grace to what was still being called Euro-Com-munism, which was the notion that Communism and democracy were compatible.

Aiready badly shaken by the divisions within its movement after the Soviet interventions in Cambo-dia and Afghanistan, Euro-Com-munism could not survive the Warsaw coup. And at the same time, the basic dogma of all Com-munism — the dictatorship of the proletariat — died in Poland. The proletariat is imprisoned there so the dictatorship can rule without hindrance.

The excommunication of the Italian Communist Party is not the end but the beginning of a series of events that may be considered the third schism of the modern Communist movement.

Ideological

But the denunciations of Tito in 1948 and Mao in 1961 were provoked by rejection of Moscow's political domination, and without raising the slightest doubt as to the value of the Soviet system as a model. This time, however, the divorce is ideological. The Italian Communist Party has formally re-jected "real Socialism" as a model.

Embarrassment

The French Communists participate in a government led by the Socialist Party, which has been the most virulent critic of dictatorships throughout the world - this despite the embarrassing affair of the gas deal with the Soviet Union. And the Socialists will not allow the four Communist ministers in the French government to remain silent over the Soviet violation of international relations and democratic procedures in the Kremlin's attack on the Italian party.

But what sort of links can exist between the French and Italian Communist Parties, when the Communist-led French labor federation CGT constantly assails the Polish union Solidarity, while the Italian union CGIL, presided over by Luciano Lama, a member of the Communist Party, announces that it will finance the activities of the clandestine sector of Solidarity in Poland?

The timing of the Prayde article, also was significant. The attuck on Tito in 1948 signaled the start of a campaign that led to the Stalinization of Eastern Europe and to the Korean War. The attack on Mao in 196t was followed by the Cuban missile crisis and the construction of the Berlin Wall.

'Reaganomics' Continues to Play in Peoria, But Some Critics Still Wait for a Finale

By David S. Broder

Washington Past Service

WASHINGTON — The Reagan program is still playing in Peoria. It is more than a little off key, with unemployment higher than most adults can ever remember. But they are not ready to shoot the piano player or even demand that he change his tune. They want to hear how the piece ends.

The convenional wisdom in Washington is that after his first-year legislative triumphs, Ronald Reagan is riding for a fall. The combioation of deep recession, high unemployment and an approaching election will weaken his Republican support and embolden the Demoeratic opposition, it is said. But the cooven-tional wisdom may be wrong. What jobless carpenters, worried Caterpillar Tractor workers and nervous farmers were say-ing last week in the middle of frozen Illinois was echoed in seven other communities from New Haven to San Marcos, where Washington Post reporters traveled with members of Congress and interviewed their constituents.

The Post went mainly to districts that gave Mr. Reagan his 1981 victories: the home bases of conservative and liberal Republicans and conservative Democrats. The idea was to see if that support was being eroded by the economic adversities of this cruel winter.

Indicative Comments

If the sentimeous in those communities and the comments of a dozen other House members interviewed by phone are indicative, the mood of the returning Congress may be more more amenable to President Reagan's second-year program than a look at the recession's bleak measures would suggest.

A lot more people are nervous about what

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., Republican of Tennessee, last year called "the riverboat gamble" of Reaganomics, But they are oot yet cashing in their chips.

Larry Hohbs is a Houston painter and paperhanger, his wife, Ronda, is expecting their first child. Both were raised as Democrats, but they admire Ronald Reagan. "For the one year he's been in office," she said, "he's done a belluva joh." "I'm a union man," her busband added, "but with Carter, it seems that nothing much was accomplished. ... Ronald Reagan is more of a leader." He talks about unemploy-ment and the big deficits and said be known there are big risks. "He'll either make us or break us," he said of the president." There are pressures in many districts to write off Reaganomics as a failure. Kellar Blair, a black minister's wife in Aogusta, Ga., said: "People are desperate. A lot of poor people are suffering and the crime rate is bound to go up." John Driscoll, the president of the Connecticut AFL-ClO, finds "quite a bit of revulsion" with Mr. Reagan. "What turned most working people off," he said, "was the letdown after their first paychecks in October.

There wasn't enough tax cut in them to buy a pack of cigarettes."

And in San Marcos, Texas, Ofelia Vasquez, the director of the community action program, pronounced herself "disillusioned." I think the rich are getting richer," she said. "It was a mistake to cut taxes at the same time they cut the budget. We should cut taxes when we can But the feeling reporters heard most often was expressed by Karren Wolfe, a 39-year-old housewife in Pomona, Calif. Raising eight children on the salary her husband makes as a pump company manager, she acknowledges she got oervous when he talked about the firm's declining orders. But "we just have to hang in there and, hopefully, it will work," she said of the Reagan economic plan.

Uoemployment and cuts in social services coocan her, she said, but "it's better to burt a few than the whole nation. They should give Reagan a chance to cut inflation, get spending down, get government back where it should That may seem easy for ber to say. It is not easy for Morgan Jones of Augusta, Ga. And he says the same thing.

Mr. Jooes. 40, watched about 70 fellow employees at Coastal Lumber Co. get dismissal ootices for Christmas. Now the company is up for sale and Mr. Jones has to worry about how long he can hold onto his $15,000-a-year sales manager job.

Views Are Echoed "It's a strange phenomenon," Mr. Jones' congressman, Rep. Doug Barnard Jr., Democrat of Georgia, said of the many cooversations be has had with people who echo Mr. Jones' views. One of the Democrats whose votes gave Mr. Reagan his budget and tax victories in the House last year, Mr. Barnard said he has kept his ear tuned for sounds of rebellion and "no one has told me, 'You botched it up.' " "Most understand it still hasn't gotten under way yet," be said. "And those who supported the program can't be faulted until it's proven a failure."

What is true of this Democrat is also true of two Republicans from cormally Democratic Youngstown and New Haven, who went bome oervous about their support of the president and come back prepared to go a little further

It is true of two freshman Repoblicans from Texas and California, who beat Democratic incumbents on Mr. Reagan's coattails in 1980 and will be facing the voters on their own this November. They are prepared to roll the dice on the Reagan program, gambling it will pan out pobtically.

Even the veteran moderate Democrat from Lyndon Johnson's home district, Rep. Jake Pickle, who voted against the 1981 budget and rickie, who voted against the 1981 hudget and tax cuts, is far from ready to lead a crusade Against Reaganomics. At an Austin high school assembly, early one day, he told the seniors, "I think the administration is going to have to make some crucial decisions. They cannot get our economy back in shape by following the course we're on."

Still later, he told a reporter: "Tim going to try to cooperate by making additional reason."

try to cooperate by making additional, reasonable cuts. You can't operate like 20 years ago. But I'm not going to try to solve all our problems by cutting social programs."

Such comments give weight to the words of Peoria's congressman, House Minority Leader Robert Michel, Republican of Illinois, who said the second year of Reaganomics will be "more difficult" to push through Congress - but oot impossible.

Rep. Michel can see the economic problems of the United States in microcosm every time he goes home. Unemployment, pushing 10 percent, "is the highest in my lifetime," said Mayor Dick Carver, a Republican and Reagan defender in the U.S. Conference of Mayors. The Peber hyenery was ordered closed on the less Pabst brewery was ordered closed on the last day of 1981, following Hiram Walker's distillery out of town. Caterpillar, the biggest employer, had ordered the first large-scale layoffs in 20 years, even before it lost an $80-million

From Philadelphia, Democrat William H. Gray 3d said that "unemployment is just going through the roof, and, if that isn't enough to frighten people, this is represent as a reciprocal

But oorth of there, in the Bronx, Democrat Mario Biaggi finds "those affected by the cuts are talking, but mostly there's a strange silence about them. The feeling I get is they want to give the president more time; they think he's

In Oklahoma City, Republican Mickey Edwards agreed that "people will be upset if the president asks for higher taxes." "He con-

He is not the only one who measures in months, if oot weeks, the tolerance for Reaga-nomics. Donald A. Johnson, the executive sec-retary of the West Central Illinois Building Trades Council and the director of labor for former Illinois Gov. Dan Walker, a Democrat, says that his dues-paying membership has dropped from 14,000 in 1980 to 10,000 oow because of the depression in construction.

In the back room of Sambo's Restaurant in Little Rock, Ark, four men are having late afternoon coffee. Three voted for Mr. Reagan in 1980 and the fourth would switch to support him oow. But they think the ecocomy is los "If it weren't for the government work" at the local Air Force base, said Jimmy Stinson, an electrical cootractor, "there wouldn't be any thing." "He's not trying to hurt the middle-income people." B.J. Choate, a realtor, said of Mr. Reagan, "but that's what it [his program] is doing right oow. "It's tilted toward the wealthy," Warren Shell, owner of a transport furm, agrees, "but he doesn't mean it that way." Willis Sanders, a beating and air-conditioning repairman, said oothing will improve "until his program has a chance to work." Nothing else has belped with inflation," be observed. "but if he fails, we're going to have a

Ed Bethane, the Republican who represents these four men in the House, said that every time be begins to wooder if Mr. Reagan can sustain momentum for his program, "I come out here and they say he's on the right track in his effort to change some fundamental attitudes about working, saving and investing. There's a feeling this will ultimately help the economy more than just changing the budget."

'Destined to Fail'

But Rep. Bethune worries that the Reagan program is "destined to fail miless it means prosperity for black America as well as white America."

The concern about the fairness of the Reagan program pops up time and again, and not just from critical Democrats. Rep. Lawrence J. DeNardis, Republican of Connecticut. a freshman in what was a Democratic district worries about people like William Elder, a 70-year-old office employee in New Haven, who said, "Reagan has forgotten the days when he worked for $30 a week. occupied since the Six-Day War of June, 1967.

While in Yamit and other settlements along the northern Sinai's Mediterranean coastline ultranationalist holdouts are saying they will refuse to leave, life bere is quietly but sadly Israel's $17-billion investment in a new frontier - a gamble predicated on the belief that then-hostile Egypt could never bring itself to make peace with the Jewish state — is being obandoned in the last and most painful retreat since the signing of the peace treaty on March "It's all over," said Yaacov Bar-Levy, 34-year-old manager of an Ophira youth hostel and head of the Sharm el Sheikh area settlers committee. "We're just waiting until our school closes on March 26, and then we'll go away with our dreams and our disappointments."

He added: "What Israel doesn't need is a war of Jews against Jews. OK, we bye in a democracy. But if this democracy goes to an active resistance, I will oppose that. Most people here are just waiting intil the end."

The end, officially, will be April 25, the deadline for the completion of Israel's withdrawal from the Sinai under the terms of the treaty. But for many, it will come sooner than that, and for some it has already come. For some it has already come.

Some residents say they will date the end from Feb. 10, when Israel's Ministry of Communications will literally pull the plug on the southern Sinai, cutting telephone service except for a few emergency lines beamed by radio transmitters.

For the resort hotels and boliday villages along the Gulf of Aqaba, where superb beaches and some of the best diving reefs north of the equator used to attract thousands of visitors a month, the end will probably be March 31, which is when the hotel staffs have been told to

But the southeast Sinai coast already has the smell of death in places.

The holiday village of Neviot, halfway between Elath and here, has already closed, and the only signs of life on the beach these days are backpacking European youths and a few bedown who hang around looking for day work or trying to sell seashell necklaces to the few bedown who hang around looking for day work or trying to sell seashell necklaces to the few Israeli tourists who still stop by for a last look.

At the adjacent settlement farm, the last crop of melons has been harvested, and the remains of this season's flowers are being cut for export to Europe.

"People here are realistic," said Allon Emmanuel, the 33-year-old Neviot manager, who settled in the village in 1972. "We don't live in a fantasy world like they do in Yamit. We know we can't stay. We know the peace process is like a buildozer, moving along slowly without anything strong enough to change it. All the little controversies about not leaving are irrelevant. The fact is, we are leaving."

who are also working on the base.

The multinational force's new headquarters, which will house 1,000 members, is about the only sign of constructive activity in the Sinai these days. Enormous Operation In pulling back from the Sinai, the largest logistical operation ever by Israel, the Israeli Army has abandoned three major air bases and has evacuated 103 infantry and armored corps camps. Six Gulf Ministers Set Up $3-Billion Investment Firm BAHRAIN --- Six Gulf states agreed Wednesday to set up a $3 billion investment company as their oil ministers arranged to meet on Sunday to coordinate prices and production.

Finance ministers of the Gulf Cooperation

Finance ministers of the Gulf Cooperation Council decided in the Saudi capital of Riyadh to set up a Gulf investment corporation with initial capital of $3 billion, the official Qatar news agency said.

They also formed five expert committees to work out details of implementing a wide-ranging economic agreement — along the lines of the European Common Market — that was ratified by their heads of state last November.

Saudi Finance Minister Mohammed Abalkhail said the ministers would meet again in June to endorse the final form of the economic agreement, the official Saudi press agency said.

A council spokesman in Riyadh also announced that oil ministers of the six — Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Oman, Bahrain, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates — would meet on Sunday, their first gathering since the group was formed last May.

The six Gulf states derive virtually all their income of over $400 million a day from oil and produce about 11.5 millinn barrels per day — half the output of OPEC.

They decided to establish closer links last year in the face of threats they saw from the Soviet intervention in afghanistan, the Iranian revolution and the Iran-Iraq war.

The ministerial meetings began on Monday when defense ministers began two days of talks that covered the establishment of a Gulf armaments industry.

Greece Moves to Take Over Exxon Interests

Washington Post Service ATHENS - In its first major nationalization move since coming to power last October. Greece's Socialist government has announced it will take over the Exxon oil refinery complex near Salonika in northern

A spokesman for Exxon, whose contract with the Greek state for the Salonika plant was due to expire in 1983, said the company expected the takeover negotiations to be "friendly," and he predicted that they would lead to "a smooth handing over of Exxoo's activities at the plant to Observers in Athens said the Tuesday announcement was probably welcomed by Exxon, whose profits from the Salonika refinery have been small by international standards. The plant has an annual refining capacity of 3.3 million tons, and the most recent available figures show a profit of approximately $9 million for 1979. BMW Chief Hints Dividend May Be Reduced

MUNICH — Bayerische Motoren Werke's managing board chairman, Eberhard voo Kuenheim, said Wednesday he could not rule out the possibility of a cut in 1981 dividend from the 10 marks per 50 mark share paid on 1980 results. He told a news conference that 10-Deutsche mark payout by BMW in the last two years was unusually high and "this cannot be a fixed dividend level." Mr. von Kuenheim said the company could not maintain 1980 profit levels in 1981, despite last year being generally a good year for BMW with turnover, production and sales rising to record levels. BMW is to report 1981 results at the end of April.

Bastogi to Cut Holdings, Seek Partners

AP-Dow Jones MILAN — Bastogi, the struggling Italian holding group, said Wednesday it will shed some shareholdings and properties and seek new partners in its subsidiary operations in a bid to restore the company.

"Bastogi isn't any longer a financial holding company, it is a conglom-erate," said Chairman Luigi Santamaria. That means the company can't isolate itself from the good and bad aspects of its subsidiaries and, in times of industrial crisis like the present, it's clear that the situation is damaging to the holding company." Deepening losses forced the company earlier this month to write down its capital to 92.3 billion lire ($74.6 million) from 171.4 billion lire. Though Bastogi's board said at the time it would try to recapitalize the company, a lack of prospective underwriters has cast doubts on the likelihood of such a strategy.

Effect of Trade Law Changes Will Be Slow, Says Suzuki

TOKYO - Plans to drop nontarrif trade barriers and open the Japanese market to more foreign goods will oot have any immediate impact, Premier Zenko Suzuki said At the same time the head of Ja-pan's central bank said there are unmistakable signs that Japanese exports as a whole have been slowing, affecting the economic outlook of the nation to some extent.

Premier Suzuki told reporters that the effect of removing at least 67 out of 99 nontariff barriers cited by the United States and the European Economic Community would be gradual. But he called on the United States and Europe to boost sales efforts in Japan. Japan is under pressure from its major trading partners to cut its huge trade surpluses. According to recent forecasts, Japan could have a $20-billion surplus in U.S. trade and a $15-billion advantage with the EEC in the current financial year ending in March.

Bank of Japan Governor Haruo Maekawa said Wednesday that the slowdown in exports has been due to voluntary controls of exports by Japanese industries and increased overseas inventories of Japanese goods reflecting recession in the United States and other Western

Mr. Mackawa said, however, it is difficult at this stage to forecast the future trend of Japanese exports. However, inventory adjust-ment by Japanese industries has been completed, which is a favorable factor for the further development of the economy, he said. U.S. Reports Chinese

Russia Selling Large Volumes Of Heating Oil

LONDON - The Soviet Union is offering an unprecedented number of cargoes of light heating oil on the spot market, apparently motivated by a strong need to earn foreign exchange, oil trade sources said Wednesday. This development, which is conributing to a sharp decline in oil product prices, follows reports of higher sales of gold by the Soviet Union on the world market.

One source said that over the last two weeks more than 200,000 metrie tons of Soviet heating oil have appeared in the market. Other estimates put the total as high as 300,000-400,000 tons.

January and February are mos unusual, analysts claim Some suggest that the country has been forced to sell fuel that it would normally use for internal consumption because of its high foreign currency requirements. Following a series of poor har-vests over the last two years, the Soviet Union has had to resort to importing vast quantities of grain. Estimates of the country's requirements during 1982 range between 40 and 50 million metric tons, all of which will have to be paid for in foreign currency. In addition, some analysis believe the Soviet Union has been helping Poland meet its short-term hard currency requirements.

Gasoil for delivery in early February traded in a range of $296-$297 per metric ton in the spot market Wednesday. Last week similar cargoes were traded as high as $310 per metric ton.

Posts Strong Trade Surplus Surplus in Payments

Sets a Post-War High

WIESBADEN, West Germany

— West Germany Wednesday
posted a strong surplus of 5.14 billion Deutsche marks in its December trade balance and at the same time reported that its current-account surplus of 4.9 billion DM set a post-war monthly high.

The Federal Statistics Office said the December trade surplus rose from 3.94 billion DM in November and was op from 1.01 bil-lion DM in December 1980.

It said the current-account surplus climbed from a surplus of 1.2 billion DM in November against a deficit of 822 million DM in December, 1980. The previous monthly record — 4.7 billion DM - was posted in December, 1974. Last October's surplus of 2.9 billion DM was the first positive bal-ance since April, 1979.

For all of 1981, West Germany recorded a trade surplus of 27.9 billion DM, up from a surplus of 8.9 billion DM in 1980.

The 1981 current-account deficit narrowed to 17.5 billion DM from 29.8 billion DM in 1980, according to agency figures.

The statistics office reported that exports in December slipped 0.4 percent to 35.95 billion DM from 36.12 billion DM in November. Imports fell 4.2 percent to 30.81 billion DM from 32.17 billion DM in November, exports last month rose 18.7 percent while imports increased 5.4 For all of 1981, exports totaled 396.99 billion DM, rising 13.3 per-cent from 350.32 billion DM in 1980, Imports climbed 8.1 percent to 369.11 billion DM from 341.38 billion DM the year earlier. A spokesman for West Germany's industrial and trade association said the improved figures were caused by increased export efforts because of weak domestic demand.

Rate Difficulties Reacting to the news, Frankfurt foreign exchange traders said earlier rumors of a large current-ac-count surplus had sent the dollar down to a fixing level of 2.3090 DM Wednesday from an opening at 2.3145 DM and Tuesday's fixing of 2,3395 DM. In recent days the mark had depreciated sharply against the dollar as a result rising U.S. interest rates and declining

The inclination toward capital exports from West Germany has grown again, and as long as one ncedn't count on a sharp revaluation, the mark appears a cheap currency to borrowers," he said. Mr. Schlesinger said the cons-of what leeway it has had to lower interest rates, he said. Mr. Schlesinger cantiooed against focusing too much on interest rates as a factor in reviving the economy, adding that the fun-damental problems of the econo-

Sony Introduces Pocket-Sized TV

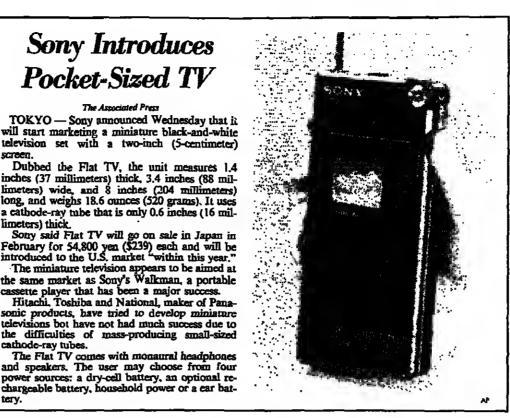

TOKYO - Sony announced Wednesday that it will start marketing a miniature black-and-white television set with a two-inch (5-centimeter)

Dubbed the Flat TV, the unit measures 1.4 inches (37 millimeters) thick, 3.4 inches (88 millimeters) wide, and 8 inches (204 millimeters) long, and weighs 18.6 ounces (520 grams). It uses a cathode-ray tube that is only 0.6 inches (16 millimeters) thick

Sony said Flat TV will go on sale in Japan in February for 54,800 year ($239) each and will be introduced to the U.S. market "within this year." The miniature television appears to be aimed at the same market as Sony's Walkman, a portable cassette player that has been a major success. Hitachi, Toshiba and National, maker of Panasonic products, have tried to develop miniature televisions bot have not had much success due to

French Launch World Computer Center

PARIS - The French governent is launching a multimilliondollar international center to design personal computer systems for education and training in both the industrialized countries and the Third World. A statement issued after a Cabinet meeting Wednesday said the center would serve as a "crossroad of ideas and expertise" in smallcomputer technology. Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber was named to head the center, whose board will be international in scope but include at least nine rench Cabinet ministers. The World Center for Microcomputer Science and Human Resources reflects the Socialist government's strong belief in the computer as an agent for social change while further extending French efforts to compete against the United States and Japan in the burgeoning computer and telecommunications market. "This is not without precedent," says Michael Tyler, president of CSP International, a telecommunications research and consulting firm, "The French are already involved in such things as digital switches and videotex [televised transmission of texts]. This is part of a broad strategy to obtain preeminence in information process-

mg."
The center is expected to place a heavy emphasis on education projects in the Third World. Pilot projects in the Third World. Senegal, Kuwait, Ghana and the Philippines. Saudi Oil Minister Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani has reportedly requested that the first project be set up in Saudi Arabia. It is possible that OPEC contributions might bolster the center's proposed 120-million-franc (about $20 million) annual budget. In France, the center will undertake projects designed to retrain workers displaced by automation. Sources close to the center privately express concern over union reaction to this approach. What impresses many observers is that the center has been able to attract some of the world's leading computer scientists. In addition to several Japanese and Third World participants, several U.S. computer scientists will play an active role in the center. Nicholas Negroponte, a professor of computer graphics, will take a leave of absence from MIT to become the center's first director. Seymour Papert, creator of a high-

There is no question, though, that France wishes to establish the same kind of preeminence in personal compoter software. "This has all the kind of lofty goals you associate with France," says Mr. Lucky. "You have the rest of the world looking on, half with admiration and half with reserved judgement."

Despite White House concern over the handling of monetary pol-icy, Mr. Regan said President WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration plans to propose Reagan is not going to call for the resignation of Fed Chairman Paul the withholding of income taxes on dividends and interest as a way to reduce tax evasion and boost gov-A Voicker.

World Bank Cuts Low Cost Funds for Poorest

From Agency Dispatches
WASHINGTON — The World
Bank cut funds available for lowcost loans to its poorest members by more than a third Tuesday, for-$2,650 a year.

mally recognizing that the United States has cut back substantially its contributions to the International Development Association, a bank affiliate, a spokesman said. The directors of the bank decided at a board meeting that only

$2.6 billion would be available for "soft" IDA loans this year, a cut of $1.5 billion. The United States originally planned to give $1.08 billion to IDA this year but bas now cut this to $750 million.

The bank also established a policy, to be phased in over five years or in some cases a little longer, to

The officials said the bank would monitor the graduation policy and would modify it if that became necessary.

U.S. government sources said that the United States was unhappy, however, with the graduation guidelines, preferring them to be set at a lower amount.

The officials said that the per capita guideline was identical with those established previously, a development that the Reagan administration is certain to view with concern.

The International Development Association was due to make loan tribution, other major donors, including all the major industrialized nations, have cut back correspond-

In partial compensation for the $1.5-billion cutback in loan commitments, the World Bank is to raise its ordinary lending this year by $800 million, or 8 percent, a spokesman said Tuesday. These funds, however, will only be available to countries able to pay the higher interest rates charged on the main World Bank loans, and who satisfy the stricter requirements of

IDA money in the past, has al-ready been warned that it will have a smaller share of these funds in the future. South Asia as a whole will have its IDA share for this year cut from $2.8 billion to $1.6 billion, while the sub-Saharan African countries will be cut from

$1.1 billion to $900 million. most of the African countries who have IDA loans are not considered sufficiently creditworthy. The board said that the new guideline for "graduation" would only trigger discussions on phasing out bank borrowing, and would be

STRANGE GODS The Great American Cult Scare By David G. Bromley and Anson D. Shupe Jr. Introduction by Harvey Cox. 249 pp. $13.50. Beacon Press 25 Beacon St., Boston, Muss, 02108

Reviewed by Mary Cancwell

WHILE it would not be accurate to say that the United States bas welcomed its various sects, it is oonetheless a home to many. The Shakers were originally English emigres; Mormonism is native born. assorted offsprings of mainland Protestantism have flourished in this country. Many a promioent U.S. politician has been revealed to belong to a sect obscure until his electioo. Dwight D. Eisenhower's family, for example, were members of the River Brethren, a branch of the Mennonites, and his mother eventually became a Jehovah's witness. And it is ironic that it was the election of a Roman Catholic president, a member of a sect that predates all other Christian sects io the United States, that occasioned the most fear. "At one time," say the authors of this valuable book, "Catholics experienced some of the most sec lics experienced some of the most severe discrimination and violent persecution in U.S. history."

"Strange Gods" is an exploration of six of today's most prominent cults: the Unification Church, the Children of God, the Hare Krishnas, the Divice Light Mission, the Church of Scientol-ogy and the People's Temple. But un-like most current chroniclers of American cults, David G. Bromley and Anson D. Shupe Jr., put their exegeses within a historical context. In doing so, they reject hysteria and slide such seemingly aberrant phenomena as "getting clear" and Krishna con-sciousness into, if not the mainstream, the tributaries of American religious experience. Some of the sects are, in fact, inspired guessers. Who would quarrel with the Children of God's expectation of "The Time of the Great Confusion" (due, they said, in the late 1970s or early '80s), which would be marked by "a progressive worsening of the world situation, rampaging inflation, increased pollution, civil strife, political chaos and economic disaster"? What makes the present U.S. reaction to the new religions—aside from the bad oder lent them by the Rev. Jim Jones and the tragedy in Guyana - different from that of preceding generations, however, is that the main opposition to them is engendered not by the government or other established religions but by their members' families. It is their despair (a child lost to a saffron-yellow tobe and a pigtail by which to yank him into heaven seems lost indeed) that has given birth to deprogramming, the best known of whose practitioners is Ted Potrick.

whose practitioners is Ted Potrick. But deprogrammers such as Patrick appear to be more of a threat to the individual's civil liberties than any "brainwashing" does.

So, too, Bromley and Shupe say, are the confessions of apostates, For instance, "Crazy for God," the autobiography of Christopher Edward, a former follower of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon, is "a modern illustration of a literary genre as old as the ani-Mormon and anti-Catholic movements of the early 19th century."

ments of the early 19th century." Both the authors of "Strange Gods" and its designer are overinclined to take the reader by the haod. The writers are food of phrases like "as we shall see" and "we begin this chapter"; the designers are fond of visual breaks for such matter as a definition of cults or evidence for the use of mind-control techniques. But for anyone who wants to read a sane, iotelli-gent dissection of America's new religions and their zealous opposition this small, rather ugly book is a beau-

PROPHET OF BLOOD

The Untold Story of Ervil LeBaron and the Lambs of God By Ben Bradlee Jr. and Dale Van Atta. 350 pp. $15.95. Putnam, 200 Madison Ave., New York, N.Y. 10016.

Reviewed by Carolyn Banks

THE AUTHORS call Ervil Le-Baron a "charismatic energumeo in the tradition of Charles Manson and, more recently, the Rev. Jim Jones of Guyana fame. Indeed, it is impossible to read of LeBaron's Lambs of God without recalling those other, more widely publicized cults, LeBaron and his Lambs did not get much press until the 1977 murder of Dr. Rulon Allred, with which the book opens. That murder - executed by a two-woman hit squad — spot-lighted not just LeBaron's but a number of polygamist sects. Allred had been the leader of ooe sect, as were two of Ervil LeBaron's brothers. Ervil LeBaroa, in fact, had been born to "polygs," who had fled to Mexico following their excommunication from the Mormon Church.

There is a wealth of detail about this subculture, fascinating in and of itself. More interesting, though, is the meticulous account of the way Le-Baron subverted the doctrine of plural marriage to his own murderous ends.

Polygamist Community

"In a polygamist community," the authors tell us, "control of the women confers power, and Ervil understood that. Influencing them was tanta-mount to having a crony in every home." Thus LeBaron, while still a member of his brother Joel's Church of the Firstborn of the Fulness [sic] of Time, organized the secret United Women of Zion. They would rid the world of his many enemies. "He said the women were going to do the killing because people weren't suspicious of women," one participant recalls. Another remembered that Ervil Le-Baron "really began to feel that he had God's power to go and take lives if he so desired. . . There was a lot of talk about 'put to death, put to death " "

LeBaron's 11th wife, Vonda, was his most willing killer, we learn in the book. Devoted to her husband, she shrugged off her "sheltered, innocent and Mormon-dominated childhood'

Solution to Previous Puzzle ALLAW ANEROTTE SHEAR PAPAS TAXI WORRYWARTS and became a "murderess in the name of God." Even LeBaron's male followers bebave with aplomb in the face of the most grisly circumstances, the authors show, Lloyd Sullivan, who later de-fected, was with Ervil LeBaron when he ooticed that LeBaron's Ford LTD was sagging, LeBaroo had just ordered the execution of his-own daughter, Rebecca. "'I wonder if Rebecca's in the trunk,' LeBaron commented idly to Lloyd, who opened the trunk about four inches and was stunned to see Rebecca Chyooweth lying there . . . obviously dead."

More chilling is the book's account of the death of Robert Simons, who wrote LeBaron asking for informatioo about the Lambs of God. Simons got more than he bargained for: a persooal visit from LeBaron. When Simons refused to acknowledge LeBaron as God's prophet, one of the Lambs drove Simons to the desert where two of the others were lying in wait. Weapons drawn, they tiptoed up to within five feet of their target, who, obligingly, was standing with his back to them." The Lambs reported to their leader that Simons had been shot, doused with lime and buried.

What gave Ervil LeBaron — who had by this time declared himself the "One Mighty and Strong" — the ability to bold others in such thrall? Would we have been able to resist? This is, of course, what powers readers through documentaries about such figures. We test ourselves.

It is oever a fair test, exactly, because we meet these monsters when their madness has run its course, when they are caged, reduced. Crucial, though, is the illusion of test.

Here it is maintained through the steady, painstaking accumulation of fact. LeBaroo rises — and falls — before our very eyes. This book is scholarly in its attention to even the "dim constellations around the central sun" of Ervil LeBaron.

Equally crucial is the perpetuation of threat. Bradlee and Van Atta tell us of "a hard-core dozen followers, scattered between Arizona and California.

Arturo LeBaron, to whom Evil Le-Baroo, according to prison writings police intercepted, has already passed on his mantle. At LcBaron's death, Arturo becomes the "One Mighty and Strong." In an addendum we learn that Ervil LeBaroo died in his Utah State Prison cell on Aug. 16, 1981.

BRIDGE

BOTH North-South pairs went bad-D ly astray in the bidding of the di-agramed deal. The first two rounds of bidding were quite orthodox. South rightly opened on the strength of his powerful suit and quick tricks. North bid both black suits, and South was at the crossroads.

Both South players bid three notrump, taking a unilateral view. With only ooc diamond stopper he should have considered the possibility that a major-suit contract would be preferable. The right bid was three diamonds, a noncommittal move leaving all doors open. North would have rehid spades and South would have raised. Four spades would have produced an overtrick with oo difficulty.

One declarer in three no-trump had the benefit of the lead of the spade king. This allowed him to duck and make use of the spade suit, but when West shifted to a diamond, the declarer could not make more than eight tricks.

A diamond lead would have made matters easy for the defense. But if West had led his anemic club suit. there would have been some problems. East's entry would have been removed before his diamonds were es-

If College Coaches Make $287,000, Can Professors Be Far Behind? Yes

At best, they accept it grudgingly as a fact of scademie life. At worst, they are infuriated.

But overall, a sampling of campus opinion shows that the reported $287,000-a-year contract that the University of Pittsburgh coach, Jackie Sherrill, signed last week to coach Texas A&M's football team is not sitting well with college professors who can only dream about such a salary.

The terms of Sherrill's six-year contract announced by the university put the coach's base pay at $95,000 a year. But he also will receive cash and other benefits from Aggie fans and alumni, and published reports have put his to-

Sherrill, 38, became a hot property during five years as head coach at Pitt, where his teams compiled a 50-9-1 record. The Panthers finished 11-1 each of the last three years and were strong contenders for the national championship each time. Pitt finished fourth to national rankings in 1981.

"I just wonder bow they can do that," says Dave Strack, athletic director of the University of Arizona, which pays football coach Larry Smith about $59,000. It appears that in some areas the priorities get a little mixed up."

Coaches' salaries reflect the premium colleges place on successful athletic programs today. Some benefits are intangible - the added prestige and attention paid to a

But there also is serious money involved: televisioo appearances worth an estimated $800,000 per team for regular-season game oext fall, and lucrative bowl bids.

The bull market to college football coach's salaries is especially irksome to some faculty members because colleges face tough times with the recession, student-aid cutbacks to Washington and reductions in federal research grants.
"At a time when federal aid is about to be cut, and average salaries of full professors at major public universities range from $27,090 to $39,040, to pay Coach Sherrill what is being paid raises serious questions about the way resources are being allocated," says Irving Spitzberg, general secretary the American Association of University Professors.

It's very possible that Sherrill makes more money than anyone in the educational field, from university presidents on down. But other football coaches make big money:

Chuck Fairbanks, lured to the University of Colorado in 1979 from the New England Patriots of the National Football League, makes an estimated $200,000 a year. He gets a $47,500-a-year salary, but moch more to fringe beneance and his own TV show.

 Bo Schembechler, the University of Michigan coach, gets a $60,030 salary, plus perks includ-ing his own weekly TV show that probably bring him to well over $100,000. He was offered the Texas A&M job before Sherrill but turned it down because he had

"emotional ties to Miehigan." Oklahoma State University's Jimmy Johnson makes a $50,000 salary and another $50,000 to benefits; Vince Dooley of the University of Georgia has a $60,000 sal-ary, and $40,000 in benefits; and the University of Arkansas' Lou Holtz has a $51,945 salary, plus benefits from TV, radio, a housing allowance and car allowance worth another $125,000. "It is not just a Texas A&M problem," says Spitzberg. A breakdown of the salaries of full professors at 78 pubbe landgrant universities conducted by Mike Usher and Merle Gillam of Oklahoma State University shows ball coaches.

The survey showed professors of medicine making anywhere from $100,000-plus, to a low of $17,344, with an average of $46,262. Top biological science professors earn up to $90,000, and the highest paid business professors make $70,000. Law professors earn up to $66,000. Norman Hackerman, the presi-

Stemmark Defends Title

While some racers shrug off the championships as just another stop oo a grueling winter tour, all must be aware of the jackpot: the potentially enriching endorsements and a came enshrined with those of Tooy Sailer, Karl Schranz and Jean-Claude Killy.

Ingemar Stenmark of Swedeo will be defending the slalom and giant slalom ritles be woo at the 1978 world championships in Gar-misch-Partenkirchen, West Ger-many, and retained at the 1980 Olympies in Lake Placid. His chief challenger is Phil Mahre of the United States, the World Cup

For Mahre it is an opportunity to erase the annoying asterisk of needing combined points to beat Stenmark for the World Cup title. It is a chance for Mahre to race Stenmark head to head to the spotlight of global television, and be is forgoing the opportunity to defend the combined title be won at Lake Placid so that be may concentrate on the sialom and giant slalom events late next week.

Mahre will be coming into the championships fresh from a slalom victory over Stenmark, a triumph in which he virtually clinebed the overall World Cup ritle for the second straight year.

An Austrian Tradition

In the men's downhill Sunday, the Austrians will be trying to keep the title they have held since 1974, when David Zwilling dethroned Bernhard Russi with a gold medal in St. Moritz, Switzerland. come when he returned to Austria. This year the leading Austrian contender is Harti Weirather, a winner last Sunday in Wengen.

Course Suits Canadians

Canadians have dooe exceptionally well on this course. David Irwin and Ken Read won the last two downhills staged here, in 1975 and 1978, and Steve Podborski winning in 1979 when bad weather forced a cancellation after 26 racers had finished. Moreover, Gerry Sorensen was a victor last year in the women's downhill.

None of the women's titles is heiog defeoded. Anoemarie Moser-Proell, the downhill champion, turned professional after the 1980 Olympics. Hanni Wenzel, who woo everything else at Lake Placid, injured berself a few weeks ago. Judging by recent World Cup history, Erika Hess must be considered the favored elsomiet, and sidered the favored slalomist and Sorensen one of several capable downhillers.

Recent victories by Holly Beth Flanders and Christin Cooper have giveo the American women's team a spiritual boost. The last American to win a championship race was Barbara Anne Cochran, the slalom winner in the 1972 Sapporo Olympics.

Flanders lost a ski during a downhill training run Wednesday morning but was oot injured. She was luckier than Debbie Armstrong, her 18-year-old teammate, who left for home after breaking a leg on Tuesday.

A total of 24 medals are at stake in the championships, which coo-tinue through Feb. 7. Both the women and men will race the traditional downhill, slalom and giant slalom events. But for the first time since 1948, separate downhills and slalom races will be held to compute the combined. The racing program opens Thursday with the women's combined downhill.

At the eod, there was a seven-paragraph publicity release, with Steinbrenner praising the way Jackson and his agent had cooducted negotiations, and citing Jackson's good qualities for the Hall of Fame. It was like Rhett Butler telling Scarlett he would write her a letter of recmendation if she ever wanted an office job in Atlanta.

Life After Oakland

It had started so passionately, Jackson was young when the Oakland A's won five straight division championships, but he knew there must be something more to life than the braying of Charles O. Finley's pet mule, Reggie made his break, to Baltimore, but his heart was set oo New York.

Riding through New York City in the Orioles' bus one day in 1976, Jackson entertained his temporary teammates by speculating which penthouse would one day be his: Should be live on Riverside Drive or Central Park West or Fifth Avenue? Reggie let himself be romanced by other clubs in the fall of 1976, a whirlwind court-ship while his agent, Gary Walker, who does not believe to airplanes, followed Reggie around m a motor bome, to make sure the club owners' intentions were It was all over the day George Steinbrenner strolled Reggie around the East Side. Memory is a little blurred by now, but the impression is that there were violinisis on street corners, wait-George and Reggie waited for the lights to change. There may even have been a Yankee general manager ringing the bells to the tower of St. Patrick's, which is what general managers do when they work for George. Steinbreamer beld nothing back as be wooed Reggie in publie. That's the way love affairs go at the beginning.

came to regret ever coming to New York, came to feel the city and the team were against him. Sometimes he owned New York. For five years Reggie Jackson was as charismatie and heroic as any Yankee has ever been, but that was hardly enough for a man with a high Intelligence Quotient and an even higher Ego Quotient. He had to be io

the middle of everything. Pieture Reggie in a World Series game, hitting a sacrifice fly to deep center field. He passes first base and watches the outfielder catch the ball. He stands motionless, inspects the futile throw to the infield, follows his teammate's progress to bome plate and the dugout.

Then Reggie turns and waits until the "I" flickers on the Yankee line in the scoreboard. Satisfied that everybody else in the ballpark has done the job, Reggie is now content. He claps his hands once, and coosents to jog back to the dugout, allowing the game to continue. He is having a love affair with baseball and the Yankees and, like many lovers, with himself.

The affair could have survived all the little indiscretions like the anal lateness to spring training. George and Reggie savored those scenes, like couples who enjoy throwing dishes around the love nest, because it is so The affair could not survive

Last spring Jackson struggled to raise his batting average to .200. He lost his supreme confi-dence; his muscles were still in the right places, but for the first time in his career be felt mortal. It showed in his eyes.

When the baseball players went oo strike in June, Reggic was the Yankee representative who informed the other players: "Go home, the season's over," Of all the Yankees, Jackson seemed the most relieved at a break in the schedule. He made jokes about needing a midsummer vacation, but he wasn't smiling.

The Final Chapter

Wheo the strike ended, Steinbrenner sent Reggie to the doctor to see if Jackson needed glasses or Geritol or plastic sur-gery or a shrink. Kind words might have sufficed, but the owner had already turned cold. More than ever, Jackson began referring to the owner in obscene and furious tones. Hell hath no fury like a superstar

The rage produced better baseball from Reggie Jackson, including one marvelous elutch home run in the final game of the Eastern Division playoffs a "ooe more time" for Reggie to stand in the hatter's box and lovingly inspect the beauty of a long one, deep to right. When the season ended, Jackson cleaned out his locker, but that was just a call for attentioo. All he wanted was a word that he was still Reggie Jackson, that he was still Mr. October, that the violinists and the champagne and the bells of St. Patrick's would always be there for working late at the office this winter, bringing in oew people named Griffey and Collins.

Reggie and George never threw disbes at each other this January. One day it was all over. Oo Tuesday, Reggie Jacksoo moved across the country, to California, to start over again, the way people do when love dies. He was hardly out of the house when George started redecorating.

McEnroe Wins Appeal of Fine at Wimbledon

From Agency Dispatches
NEW YORK — John McEnroe has won his appeal of the $5,000 fine imposed on him for misbehavior last year at Wimbledon.

A three-man arbitration council voted 2-1 oo Tuesday in favor of sustaining the major-offense charge against McEnroe and the $5,000 fine. Under the 1981 code of conduct, however, a unanimous decision was occessary to sustain a

The Book at Pooh Corner

Reading to Children, From A.A. Milne to Arthur Schlesinger

By Glenn Collins

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — Even as the Celebrations marking the 100th anniversary of the birth of A.A. Milne proceed, parents in 60 countries are reading to their children in 25 languages from among the more than 30 million published copies of "Winnie-the-Pooh" about the adventures of Pooh, Piglet, Eeyore, Tigger, Kanga and Roo.

They are cootinuing the tradition that gave hirth to Pooh in the first place. "Uncle Remus was read aloud to us by Papa, a chapter a night." Milne wrote in his 1939 autohiography, "It's Too Late Now." "When, 40 years later, I wrote a hook called Winnie-the-Pooh' I remembered all that Uncle Remus and Reynard the Fox and the animal stories in Aunt Judy's Magazine had meant to us. I had the happy feeling that here was a magic which children, from generatioo to generation, had been unable to

One of the memories cherished hy Alan Alexander Milne (1882-1956) was that of his father reading aloud. The tradition was passed to Milne's son, Christopher, who was the model for Christopher Rohin and who, in turn, read to his daughter.

"I was read to until I was 14 or 15, and I believe that reading aloud to children is essential." Christopher Milne, 61, said by telephone from his home in Dartmouth, England, where he is a hookshop proprietor. "It was almost a traditioo in our house to have our daily chapter of Wodehouse. In fact, my mother read Wodehouse to myself and my fa-ther, and we also had Lewis Carroll and lots and lots of Lear,"

"I think the delight that parents have taken in reading the Pooh books to their children accounts for their great populari-ty," he said. "It only takes 20 minutes or so a day to read tn a child. Yet it leaves a lovely warm feeling that lasts you all your life. It's almost greater than any other pleasure a parent and child can share."

His views are born out by researchers from a variety of disci-

Chall said there had been a convergence in the findings of reading researchers, developmental psychologists, linguists and language anthropologists about the value of reading aloud. "Naturally, it's been a long historical tradition too," she said. "There is the ancient practice of reading the Bible aloud as well as the advice in the Talmud that fathers should seat their children on their laps at the age of 6 months and begin reading to them." From the 1920s through the

'50s parents were told by many educators that they should not teach their children reading at home. "But more and more we're realizing how important it is for parents to impart basic skills," said Nancy Larrick, a reading specialist and a founder of the International Reading Associa-tion, a scholarly group. "Kindergarten teachers can always tell kids who have been read to.

Challenge of TV

Larrick said reading at home had been challenged in recent years by television. There are many more one-parent homes and working couples, and fre-quently children turn on the TV because nobody's there." She also noted that working parents may feel too used to read to their

Chall said it was important not to stigmatize parents who do not read to their children. "Kids who are not read to at home can still become good readers," she said. "That's why a good school or a library is so important."

Librarians, who have long believed in the value of reading to older children in the traditional story hour, are trying to encourage reading to children at earlier ages.

"I think the trend toward working with preschoolers derives from the recent focus on early childhood development, which has stirred librarians' interest in this area," said Betsy Hearne of Booklist, the book-review magazine of the American Library Association in Chicago.

"The publishers have finally caught on, and there are more books that can he read to babies now than ever before," she said. But buying enough of them is just too expensive for most parents, and so the public librarian's inh has been to present the enormous range of books available to Reading to children is the theme of the 1982 educational program of the Children's Book Council, a nonprofit association of publishers of children's books that sponsors National Chil-dren's Book Week and en-courages the enjoyment of chil-dren's books.

Advice oo reading to children is not the exclusive province of the experts; parents have strong opinions too.

"I believe that any boredom a parent may feel in reading to children is strongly communicated to them," said the historian Arthur Schlesinger Jr. "That's why I think that the books being read should always be of interest to parents as well as to children."

Schlesinger has carried ou a family tradition by reading to his children; he was reading a swash-buckling volume called "Pirates in History" to his 9-year-old son.
Robert, the night before he was interviewed. "If children are read to, they learn to regard books as part of the landscape," he said. He has continued another tradition: His mother was not only a spirited reader-aloud hut

"and I'm a skipper too."
"It's certainly allowable to skip some detail, but you can't do it without being a fast read-er," he advised. "You try to glance ahead and conceal the fact that you're skipping. Of course, I've been caught many times."

also "an astute skipper," he said.

uries of being u former president - a position with no formal powers, but likely to cost U.S. taxpayers about $25 million this year. In 1982, the government can be expecied to pay more for former presidents - Carter, Richard M. Nivon and Gerald R. Ford. and their families and presidential widows, for pensions, Secret Service protection and other expenses, and operating money for presidential libraries and museums - than to ruo the White House. It all started in 1950, when $55,129 was paid to Harry Truman after Congress - pitying his meager financial state - passed the Former Presidents Act to help him out. Democratic Sen. Lawton Chiles of Florida, who is campaigning to restrict the expenditures, said taxpayer support for Truman's successors and their families has been "growing like Topsy." Maoy of the expenses are absurd and wasteful, he contends. He cited: Secret Service agents who are "going bonkers" watching the residence of 97-yearold Bess Truman (he suggested that the highlight of their day is the arrival of the mailman); the dispatching of a team of 10 or 12 Secret Service agents to accompany Lady Bird Johnson on a chartered Mediterranean cruise, although the agency feels there is no threat to the former first lady: Ford's decision to set up out only a library at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, but a separate museum in his hometown of Grand Rapids, Mich., 130 miles away: Government costs for the two institutions will exceed $1.5 million this year.
